Chicken eglus

Made in the USA
European Design

The eglu is ideal for keeping chickens in your garden

The eglu is a truly innovative chicken house designed specifically for the garden. Modern, stylish and available in a range of fresh and vibrant colors, it is the ideal way to start enjoying the good life today.

Every eglu comes complete with a specially designed run providing a secure area for your hens where they are safe from other animals. Also included are specially designed food and water containers which attach to the run so that the contents are clean, off the ground and at a comfortable height for the chickens. The run comes with a shade which provides shelter for the chickens from the wind, sun and rain when they are outside.

The eglu is perfect for up to four medium hens and can be positioned on grass or any other surface such as wood chippings or rough ground where the chickens can rummage. Collecting fresh eggs from hens in your garden not only ensures you get fantastic tasting eggs but you also get a good feeling inside from knowing exactly where your food comes from.

The Eglu is the best coop in the world!

Mark Halliday - New Hampshire

My son Max and I picked up our three hens, Peep, Daisy and Louise from a feed store up and they are an absolute delight. The first thing Max wants to do when we get home is to go pick up Peep and cuddle her. They are so tame and we get a couple of eggs a day.

If you are ordering chickens with your eglu then we're sure that Omlet's choice of chicken will delight you with her friendly character and superb egg laying ability. The Gingernut Ranger will soon become an inseparable part of your family. Delivered to you when they are approximately 18 weeks old, you won't normally have to wait more than 4 weeks for your first home grown eggs!

Two Gingernut Rangers will lay around 12 eggs a week

You can order between 2-4 chickens per eglu. After you have received your eglu, your chickens will be sent in a separate delivery so that the eglu is all set up and ready for them when they arrive. The chickens are ready for delivery once a month. When you order we will be able to give you individual delivery information for your chickens so that you know exactly when they will arrive.

The eglu, designed for you and your chickens

Inside, the eglu has wooden perching bars and a generous nesting box for egg laying - all the practical features that your chickens need. As well as these, come thoughtful extras such as the modern twin walled insulation and draught free ventilation that keep your chickens warm in winter and cool in the summer. The eggport, on the side of the lid, gives easy access to the nesting box and makes collecting the eggs a daily pleasure.

The eglu is quick and easy to clean, with a tray that neatly collects all the droppings. Simply slide it out and add the droppings to your compost bin to produce a richer mixture for your plants. The whole lid can be removed for more extensive cleaning and airing. The eglu's smooth plastic surfaces can be easily washed and there are no difficult corners or absorbent materials - you'll be amazed at just how easy cleaning a pet house can be!

Let your chickens out in the morning and shut them away at night using the front door.

Collect your eggs every morning through the eggport.

You can position the eglu on a layer of wood chippings. Inside, chickens have a nesting box and roosting bars for perching at night.

Any droppings done at night are collected on the dropping tray and are great for your compost.

When you open the eglu door in the morning, your chickens will be looking forward to breakfast. We can supply an all-in-one organic feed containing vitamins, minerals and protein - everything your chicken needs to stay in tip-top condition. You can of course give your chickens vegetable peelings and other left-overs from the kitchen, just avoid meat, salt and sugar.

The next item on your chicken's "to do" list will be to lay an egg! Eggs are normally laid mid-morning, a brief process marked by a final triumphant cluck announcing the arrival of a freshly laid egg. You can expect between eight to twelve eggs per week from two Gingernut Rangers; enough for several cakes and perhaps a tasty omlette on a leisurely Sunday morning.

If you are around you can let your chickens out of the run to explore your garden. They might take the opportunity to find a covered spot to indulge in a dust bath. As well as the more general feather preening this is how a chicken keeps herself clean and is very entertaining to watch.

Designed for your garden

Chickens are hardy out-door animals with an average lifespan of five years. They like to be picked up and stroked and the more you handle them the tamer they will become. Chickens are essentially ground dwelling animals capable of large jumps but unable to fly high or over long distances. They will remain in your garden providing it has a fence approximately 5ft high.

If your chickens are out in the garden, they will come home to roost at dusk. They naturally do this, adapting the hours when they are active with the changing seasons. Once they are roosting inside the eglu, you can lock it by simply turning the door handle and pushing it down, ensuring the chickens have a peaceful nights sleep.

An eglu will fit into gardens of all shapes and sizes. As a guide 20ft by 30ft is plenty of space to move your eglu around in.

Going away for the weekend? You can happily leave your chickens in the eglu and run by simply topping up the feed and water containers before you go. For longer breaks, a friend or relative will usually be more than happy to look after your chickens in return for the fantastic eggs.

The eglu keeps other animals out

No Vermin Allowed™ is the eglu's proven defence system. The run is made of coated steel weldmesh - impossible for vermin to break. A unique 8 inch skirt sits flat on the ground and effectively prevents animals from digging under the run.

The eglu's door and eggport are secured with recessed handles leaving nothing for unfriendly paws and jaws to grip on. Thousands of chickens rely on the eglu's No Vermin Allowed™ defence system to keep them safe at night.

The specially designed food and water containers can be accessed for refilling through the run door.

The eglu's unique anti-tunnel skirt stops vermin digging and protects your chickens.

Chickens - The Essential Facts

You don't need a rooster! Female chickens lay just as many eggs without a rooster and only roosters crow in the morning.

Number of Eggs: The number of eggs a chicken lays varies from breed to breed, but a single Gingernut Ranger will lay on average 6 eggs per week.

Other animals: A lot of people who keep chickens have a cat or dog and chickens generally get on fine with both. If in doubt, be cautious and introduce your other pets to your chickens gradually. Having dogs can also help to deter vermin.

Economics: It only costs 6c a day to feed a chicken and over a year you could save as much as $200 on eggs with two chickens.

Lifespan: Chickens live for around 4 to 5 years.

Number of chickens: The eglu can accommodate up to 4 chickens - great when you want to expand your flock.

Will I be able to pick up my chickens? Yes, the more time you spend with your chickens the tamer they will become.

Can chickens fly? It's extremely unlikely you will see a flock of chickens flying overhead! Breeds like the Gingernut Ranger are essentially ground dwelling and don't do more than large hops.

We waited with such excitement for the eglus arrival & gleefully set it out for the hens. They took to it right away & soon one of the chickens was laying beautiful brown eggs. I think they feel very safe and secure in there. We certainly like it and are so glad we got one. I never would have guessed that chickens would make such fun and entertaining pets.
